

Boolean Grid Methodology

Trademark Universal no longer tutors students under the age of 18.

The Boolean Grid Methodology

The Boolean Grid Methodology was first developed by Tom Mathew in 1998 in the State of Georgia. The first time the Boolean Grid was utilized was by a male student in Dunwoody, GA taking the SAT®.

Trademark wants to thank the idiots who stole this from us. We warned everyone the SAT® would change if you did this.

If you know how to play Tic Tac Toe, you know how to use the Boolean Grid.

While (+/-, -/+)

| | | |
|------------------------------------|--|---|
| - vilified hated abhorred | | + beloved ignored forgotten controversial ignored jovial depressed |
| | | |
| | | |

Here is a quick example.

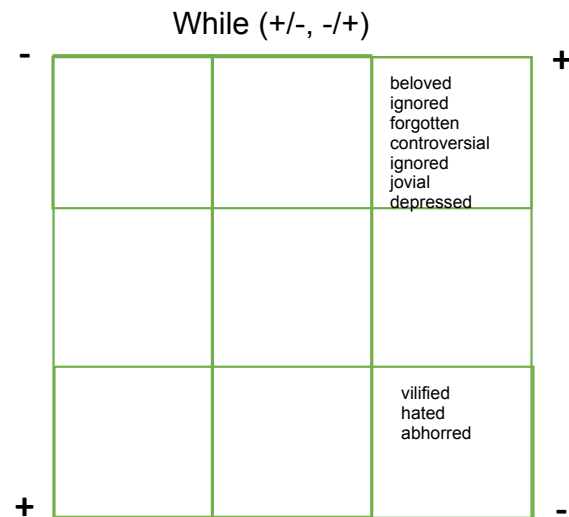

Villains such as the dapper Robert E. Lee are often _____, while real heroes such as Tecumseh Sherman are routinely _____.

- v) beloved...vilified
- w) hated....abhorred
- x) ignored....forgotten
- y) controversial....ignored
- z) jovial....depressed

If you took our IVY Verbal Review course, you would see there is a transition word in this sentence. This word, while, signals that the sentence must be positive/negative or negative/positive.

Just based on this we can eliminate choices w, x and y. These choices have no transition.

If you know how to play Tic Tac Toe, you know how to use the Boolean Grid.

Villains such as the dapper Robert E. Lee are often _____, while real heroes such as Tecumseh Sherman are routinely _____.

- v) beloved....vilified
- w) hated....abhorred
- x) ignored....forgotten
- y) controversial....ignored
- z) jovial....depressed

Now you have to determine the flow, positive/negative or negative/positive. We have to identify the key words from each half. The key word in the first half is villains. The key word in the second half is heroes.

Choice z is not correct. The sentence is too creative. This leaves us with choice v.

Trademark Universal, Inc. wants to thank all of the test preparation companies worldwide that copied the Boolean Grid. The SAT has been discontinued for the first time since World War II.

Tom Mathew personally wants to thank the Syrian Orthodox See for acts of calumny and perfidy that have been rewarded with blanket immigration bans against the nation of Syria. How stupid are all of you? In the State of NY, you cannot steal trade secrets. The Corporation personally wishes to thank the State Department for protecting American enterprise.
